b) Trial and appellate counsel in Glicklich v. Spievack, 16 Mass.App.Ct. 488 (1983); the first reported decision in Massachusetts addressing the issue of causation in a case involving "delayed diagnosis" of cancer.

c) Trial counsel in Rogers v. Okin, 478 F.Supp.1342 (D.Mass.1979), 634 F.2d 650(1st Cir.1980); Mills v. Rogers 457 U.S.291(1982); Rogers v. Commissioner of Mental Health, 390 Mass.489, 458 N.E.2d 308 (1982): This case involved the first major class action on behalf of mental patients in a state facility alleging the constitutional right to refuse invasive drug treatment and the use of locked seclusion in non-emergencies. After a 74 day trial, the district court found for the plaintiffs on the underlying constitutional rights and issued a permanent injunction to enforce their newly created rights. The Commonwealth appealed the case to the First Circuit, where the decision was essentially affirmed. The U.S. Supreme Court accepted certiorari and later remanded to the First Circuit. The case was then referred to the Supreme Judicial Court for consideration of effects of state law on the issues presented. All of plaintiffs' claimed rights were upheld on the basis of state law. Thereafter the First Circuit also found federal constitutional "liberty" interests to support the underlying claims. "Rogers" hearings are now routinely held in all Probate and District Courts before administering anti-psychotic medication to institutionalized patients.
